THE CHAMPION BOAT RACE. The Kelley and Randforth boat race for the championship of the River Thames took place to-day. The match for £200 a side (in gold) was made Septem ber 13, the men to row up the river above the bridge, from Putney to Mortlake, about five miles, and to start from two boats moored 20 yards apart; the steamers to be behind the men at starting, and the cutters accompanying the men to remain astern of the sternmost man throughout the race. Henry Kelley has long been the champion of the River Thames, and also a general favorite in aquatic circles : his antagonist, James Randforth of Gateshead, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, has in like manner been the bule, paved with Italian marble tiling, and lined with favorite of the Tyne siders, and has the advantage of youth on his side over the older champion. There of youth on his side over the older champ was an immense gathering along the river banks, and every available point was well occupied; numerous steamers and other craft covered the river,

THE DRAMA. EDWIN BOOTH'S THEATER. When the Winter Garden was burned, Edwin booth was left without a theater and Tragedy was left without a home. It is, however, as the wise old proverb affirms, an ill wind which blows good to nobody. Edwin Booth had long entertained the desire and the design of ailding a theater in New York, in conformity with his wn ideal. His design, though, might long have slept, and, perhaps, might never have awakened to fulfillment, ad not the Winter Garden catastrophe supplied both the reedom and the motive for new and vigorous enterprise The occasion thus offered was promptly improved. During the Spring of 1867, Mr. J. H. Magonigle, the business representative of Mr. Booth, made a thorough inspection of all the building sites in the city that were leemed eligible for a theater, and finally selected the lot of land on the south-east corner of Twenty-third-st. and he Sixth-ave. This choice was approved by Mr. Booth and by all concerned in the enterprise; the property was purchased; and on the 1st of July, 1867, work was comnenced on the new enterprise. The buildings that stood upon the hand had first to be removed. This was soon done. Their removal, however, disclosed a foundation of solid rock. Part of this it was found necesary to blast away, and the work of blasting is somewhat edious. But no time was lost; and, on the 8th of April, isss, the labor of construction was so far advanced that the corner-stone of the theater was laid. It is the great granite block, at the base, on the east end of the building. It was laid, on a cold and blustering day, in the presence of only a few persons. Mr. James H. Hackett, the veteran omedian, the best living representative of Falstaff, and ne of the most affectionate and devont students of snakespeare, performed the official ceremony, and pronounced a brief address. Some words were also spoken by Judge Daly, who said that the drama was cradled in a booth, and that by a Booth it would be perpetuated. From that day to this the hand of labor has never stayed per faltered; and now the strong and stately edificelose upon completion-rears its noble front in air, a beautiful monument of pure taste and skillful labor. It is built of granite, the stone that best typifies solidity, in that graceful style of architecture that is known as the Renaissance. This rugged material, so wrought together, becomes a truly poetic emblem of blended strength and beauty. Fair in proportion, true in substance, wisely danned, and excellent in all details, Edwin Booth's new heater is one of the most magnificent buildings on the American continent. Let us come to particulars, and try to show this in description. The front of the strucare, on Twenty third-st., is 184 feet in length, the theater front measuring 150 feet. The other 34 feet is the width of a wing of the main building, which abuts upon its west end, and has a frontage of 76 feet on the Sixth-ave. The lower part of this wing is arranged for stores, while the upper part contains offices, studios, mi cooms, and rooms for a Masonic Lodge. The theater is 100 feet deep, from north to south, and 120 feet in hight. The main entrance opens from Twenty-third-st., but there is another large entrance, opening from the Sixth-ave. At the east end of the front is a great door to the stage, coresponding, in size and style, with the main entrance to the auditorium. Between these are three smaller doors, which are to be used as means of exit. Three large panels surmount these three doors, which are to contain culptured bas-reliefs. All the doors are arched. Higher up, and placed equi-distant along the front of the theater, are three large alcoves, framed in Ionic pillars, which are to contain enormous statues in white marble. Shakespeare will stand in the central arch, and Tragedy and Comedy will occupy the thers. There are four large and handsome windows on line with these alcoves. Above runs a beautiful cor nice, and above this the side slopes inward to meet the roof, which is surmounted by three short towers. In the front of each tower there is an oval window, surrounded by elaborate carvings. A flag-staff rises from the center of the flat roof. Around the summit of each tower runs an ornamental trellis-work of iron; and, artfully placed on the lightning-rods which trail over towers and roof, are gilded stars and crescents. Entering at the principal door, the visitor will find himself in a commo , to which entrance is afforded by three arched doors. The lower floor of the theater comprises the divisions of parquette and orchestra. A spacious stone staircase, at the south end of the vestibule, leads to the balcony, in the rear of which provision has been made for a commodious promenade. Above the balcony is a second gallery, and above that is the amphitheater, which is to be reached by a stone stair-case from the vestibule within the Sixth-ave, entrance. There are ten proscenium boxes—five on each side of the stage—and the house will afford comfortable seats for 1,700 persons, besides standing room for at least 300 more. In shape, the auditorium follows the old horse-shoe model, only that it has been so skillfully medified as to result in a shape of delightful symmetry. From every part of the theater the entire stage can be distinctly seen. As yet the chairs have not been put in, nor have the walls been decorated; but the former are to be of a new design, especially provident of the sitter's comfort, and the latter are to be lined, near the floor, with Italian marble cement, and richly ornamented above in white and gold. On the ceilings bright frescoes are already beginning to shine forth. A vast chandeller will depend from the center of the roof, and this, together with all the other lights in the building, will be lit by electricity. The ornamentation of the proscenium will be simple and beautiful. Marble pillars, adorned with statuesque figures, will arise on either side of the boxes. In the center of the arch above, a massive statue of Shakespeare will be placed—the work of Turini, an Italian artist. It represents the poet meditating, and in act to write. Other statues and emblematic devices will surround this figure and complete the decoration of the arch. There is a neatly designed pit for the orches tral performers, sunk below the front of the stage and below the level of the main floor, so that neither the performers nor their musical instruments can obstruct the view of the stage from the auditorium. The reader will perceive that we speak of a perfectly devised theatrical interior. It will be easy alike of access and of egress. It will be superbly lighted. It will please the eye with its symmetrical shape and harmonious colors. It will afford luxuriously comfortable accommodation. It will be so thoroughly and so artfully heated and ventihot-air pipes that run beneath the useful chasm is neatly paved with brick. An entire scene can be sunk into it, out of sight. On the stage, as in every ther part of the theater, double floors are laid, and the flooring of the stage is secured entirely by screws-not a single nail being anywhere driven. In each of the rear corners of the stage is a spiral staircase, which leads to the fly-galleries, high up beneath the roof. These galleries are four in number, two upon each side. Between them, up aloft, depends the complex machinery requisite for lifting and lowering the scenes. There are no obstructions upon the stage, no dressing rooms there, none

They also assert their constant adhesion to Spain, and offer to assist the authorities in quelling the disturbances, confident that the supreme government will make to these provinces the concessions to which they may have a right. The insurrection is breaking up (en gran decalencia). masked ventilators up beneath the roof-that its atmosphere will be kept, as far as that is possible in a public building, wholesome and picasant. More than this could not reasonably be desired, and more than this certainly has never been attained. Passing to the stage, the visitor finds that this is not less excellent than the auditorium. The distance from the footlights to the rear wall is 55 feet, and the stage is 76 feet wide. Beneath it is a pit 32 feet deep, that was blasted out of the solid rock. This GEN. ROSECRANS IN HAVANA.

Gen. Rosecrans' mission to Mexico is regarded as made at the instance of Grant, and has caused considerable comment. The Mexican leaders seem suspicious of the American military men traveling through the country, and the presence at Port Masatian of three United States was vessels, the Pensacols, Resaca, and Lackawanna—one a flag ship—added to the general excitement, and gave the place more the appearance of an American than a Mexican city.

As the visitor walks through these strange caverus he impressed anew with a sense of the solidity of this splendid structure. Here is seen the foundation, which is of solid rock. Here are the supports-stone pillars nearly three feet square. The front wall is nearly five feet thick, and the thickness of the other walls is upward of two feet. Under the side-walk in Twenty-third-st. is the carpenter-shop of the theater, in a large dry vault; and under the side-walk in the Sixth-ave, are two large boilers which are to supply the theater with heat, and possibly to impel certain machinery which is being effected for the working of the stage; for it is Mr. Booth's design to supersede, as far as may be possible by scientific means, the necessity of manual labor. These boilers have been tested, and have been pronounced the best over inspected in New-York. They are perfectly safe and so, indeed, is every part and accessory of the theater, One fact, in this respect, may speak for many. Not a rope is to be employed on the stage; its place will be supplied by stout wire cable. All these details will enable the reader to form something like an adequate idea of the beauty and finish that characterize Edwin Booth's new theater. To our mind they combine into a perfect whole, and constitute the fulfillment of an exalted ideal. On the floor of one of the vestibules, deftly fashioned in multitudinous little stones, many-colored and beautiful will be seen the figure of Apollo, standing erect in his chariot and borne onward in swift triumph by his flery steeds. It is a fit emblem of Edwin Booth's honorable ambition. May it prove also the auspicious augury of

MUSIC.

THE OPERA SEASON-FIDELIO.

A really good performance of "Fidelio" is a rare phenomenon in the United States. The opera needs at least three first-class voices, and, generally speaking, it cannot get them, for it is not every artist who will un dertake the burden of a trying part in a composition which only one person in a hundred is able to appreciate, which many a good musician cannot learn to like, and in which there are few opportunities for those popular hits, recalls, and floral evations that to some singers are the very breath of their artistic life. Moreover, "Fidelio" needs a remarkably good orchestra, and in the hurried "seasons" which we here devote to opera it is hardly possible to give the players the requisite drilling, nor are they familiar enough with the music to safely lispense with very careful rehearsing. We can honestly say, however, that the performance last night was credit able, fand much superior to many presentations of the same opera to which it has been our misfortune to listen. Mr. Habelmann, who took the part of Florestan, deserves hearty commendation for his sympathetic but forcible interpretation of the music, and his really admirable actng. The other leading roles, filled by Madame Cellini (Leonora), Madame Rotter (Murcellina), Joseph Hermann (Rocco), and Formes (Picarro), call for no special remark The ensemble was very good, and several of the trios and other concerted pieces were given with fine effect; the superb canon in the first act, Mir ist so wunderbar, richly merited the emphatic encore that was accorded it, and one or two other numbers deserved the same compliment, though they did not get it; but individually none of the artists except Mr. Habelmann can be very warmly praised, and none certainly can be very cordially blamed. Madame Cellini was uneven-excellent in one or two things, indifferent good in many, downright had in at least one. Madame Rotter was sprightly and agreeable in every thing; Mr. Hermanns, displayed his accustomed profundity; and Mr. Formes acted and sang with animation. To us 'Fidelio" would have been enjoyable with a far worse cas than this, and to a good many others in the house we judge that it was a real musical feast; but to the bulk of the audience it was probably a mental exercise which they applauded from a sense of duty and made believe they liked because artistic propriety so required. We confess that, considering the severe intellectuality of the and the abominable condition of the weather, the excelence of the house surprised us. The Academy was al most full, and it was evident that Mr. Maretzek's little venture will bring him in a respectable profit.

To-night, we'are promised "Robert," with La Grange

Miss McCulloch, Brignell, Habelmann and Hermanns the principal parts. The other operas for this week are "Der Freyschutz" and "The Sicilian Vespers."

MISS HENRIETTA MARKSTEIN. Henrietta Markstein, the young pianist, who though only 13 years old, exhibits a remarkable proficiency in her art, makes her debut to-night at Steinway Hall, and we trust she will be encouraged by the pres ence of a large audience. The Philharmonic orchestra under Mr. Bergmann, will accompany her in a concerte of Mendelssohn's, and will perform two or three overtures and other pieces, and Madame de Lussan and Mr. Kopta

Gen. Grant yesterday afternoon rode out with Mr. Robert Bonner, to MacCombs's Dam. On his return to his hotel he was called upon by Gen. N. P. Banks, Gen. Robert Anderson, Gen. In the evening he attended the banquet given at the Astor evening he attended the banquet given at the Astor House to Attorney-General Evarts. On Monday morning Gen. Grant rode out to Fashion Course with Mr. Bonner of The Ledger, to see Dexter. They drove Lantern and the Anburn horse. It was a cold, raw, blustering day, and the ground was fresty; but under all these disadvantages Dexter trotted a mile, as timed by Gen. Grant, in 2:21½; the first half-mile, where he did not have to trot against the wind, in 1:98. One day last week, when the weather was more favorable, Dexter trotted a mile in 2:17, which is faster by some seconds than any other horse in the world ever trotted. Although Dexter has been considered a wild, excitable horse, immediately after this performance Mr. Bonner had him harnessed up single to a top wagon, and rode with Gen. Grant behind him back to the city, and down to the Metropolitan Hotel. Gen. Grant himself held the reins the greater part of the way through the city, where they encountered many stages and carriages.

WOMAN MURDERED ON THE MIDDLEPORT ROAD -YOUNG MEN OF ELLENVILLE SUSPECTED. [FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

KINGSTON, Nov. 17 .- On Sunday morning a colored farm hand named Wynkoop started between 4 and 5 o'clock to walk from Accord Village to Middleport After reaching a lonely spot on the road, three miles east of the first-named place, he stepped aside to avoid contact with an obstruction in the road. Turning to see what it was, he observed the body of a woman, with her face covered with blood, and the stones about her also spattered with blood. On the right [side, of the head a bullet had passed into the eye, going downward, and breaking the jaw. On the left side, another bullet had passed into the head, under the left ear, going thence into the shoulder, and finally passing into the left lung-The head was crushed in and terribly cut. The victim was breathing very heavily, and was perfectly unconscious. She was taken to Squire Westbrook's house, and physicians were summoned It was ascertained that the woman was enciente. She remained unconscious despite all efforts to relieve her and up to noon to-day was still unconscious, with no possible chance of hving. Since Sunday, the house where she lies has been visited by many persons, none of whom identified her. This morning the authorities resolved to have her photograph taken and sent about the country. At 7 o'clock on Sunday morning, two young men drove into the village of Middleport, their horse covered with lather. During their conversation at breakfast it was ascertained that they had lost a whip. This fact connected with the fact that a whip was found near the body of the woman on the road bears heavily against these young men. One is said to be the son of a wealthy tanner at Ellenville, and the other a clerk there. One gentleman thinks that the vicilin is from Ellenville. So strong is the suspicion against the two young men that an order has been granted for their arrest, and they are expected here to-morrow.
